2013

To Say Dark Things by Ingeborg Bachmann

Rebekah Wilson
rebekah.wilson@btopenworld.com

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.wmich.edu/transference

Part of the German Language and Literature Commons, and the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://scholarworks.wmich.edu/transference/vol1/iss1/19
Like Orpheus, I play
death on the strings of life, and in the beauty of the earth and your eyes, which govern the heavens, I can only say dark things.

Don’t forget how, all of a sudden,
on that morning when your camp was still wet with dew and the carnation lay asleep on your heart, you too saw the dark river flowing by.

The string of silence pulled taut on the wave of blood, I grasped your sounding heart.
Your curls were turned into the night’s hair of shadows, black flakes of darkness fell on your face.

And I don’t belong to you.
We lament both now.

But like Orpheus I know life strung on the side of death and your eyes, closed forever, are blue to me.