

Western Michigan University
ScholarWorks at WMU

Late Tudor and Stuart Drama

Medieval Institute Publications

11-23-2020

Dismemberment in the Medieval and Early Modern English Imaginary: The Performance of Difference

Frederika Bain
University of Hawaii, Manoa

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.wmich.edu/mip_ltsd

Part of the Medieval Studies Commons, Performance Studies Commons, and the Renaissance Studies Commons

Recommended Citation

Bain, Frederika, "Dismemberment in the Medieval and Early Modern English Imaginary: The Performance of Difference" (2020). Late Tudor and Stuart Drama. 8.
https://scholarworks.wmich.edu/mip_ltsd/8

This Monograph is brought to you for free and open access by the Medieval Institute Publications at ScholarWorks at WMU. It has been accepted for inclusion in Late Tudor and Stuart Drama by an authorized administrator of ScholarWorks at WMU. For more information, please contact wmu-scholarworks@wmich.edu.

Frederika Elizabeth Bain

Dismemberment in the Medieval and Early Modern English Imaginary

Late Tudor and Stuart Drama

Gender, Performance, and Material Culture

Series Editors

Cristina León Alfar (Hunter College, CUNY, USA)

Helen Ostovich (McMaster University, Hamilton, Canada)

Frederika Elizabeth Bain

Dismemberment in the Medieval and Early Modern English Imaginary

The Performance of Difference

DE GRUYTER

ISBN 978-1-5015-1786-0

e-ISBN (PDF) 978-1-5015-1323-7

e-ISBN (EPUB) 978-1-5015-1295-7

Library of Congress Control Number: 2020943429

Bibliographic information published by the Deutsche Nationalbibliothek

The Deutsche Nationalbibliothek lists this publication in the Deutsche Nationalbibliografie; detailed bibliographic data are available on the Internet at <http://dnb.dnb.de>.

© 2021 Walter de Gruyter GmbH, Berlin/Boston

Cover image: © The Morgan Library & Museum. MS M.638, fol. 16v.

Typesetting: Integra Software Services Pvt. Ltd.

Printing and binding: CPI books GmbH, Leck

www.degruyter.com

Acknowledgements

My first, and deeply heartfelt, thanks go to my graduate advisor, dissertation chair, and continued mentor Valerie Wayne, to whom I am beholden for her scholarship, generosity, and institutional acumen. I thank her for support through both my master's and my PhD studies, as well as through the years since my graduation: for her excellent editorial skills, for her broad and deep knowledge of early modern literature and its criticism, and for the resources to which she has introduced me; in short, for helping to shape me as a scholar. I am also very grateful to her for initially suggesting that I send my manuscript to MIP for consideration and for her thoughtful and skillful help with the index.

Many thanks to dissertation committee member Nell Altizer, now sadly gone, to whom I have owed a debt of gratitude since my undergraduate days and whose compassionate and clear-sighted attention improved any work she touched. I am grateful as well for her consistent gift for asking the questions that hit at the heart of the matter, whatever that matter might be. I owe many thanks as well to committee member Kathryn Hoffmann, who combines brilliant scholarship and incisive insight with the courage to say what needs to be said, and who prompted me to move in an entirely different direction, which turned out to be dismemberment, after reading an earlier dissertation prospectus on a different topic and pronouncing it utterly boring! I am also indebted to her for suggesting that it was time I turn my dissertation into a book and get it published.

I am very thankful to two dissertation committee members, Judith Kellogg and Karen Jolly, for introducing me to the Middle Ages and generously allowing me to sit in on classes, as well as for their encouragement, important insights, and factual corrections in bringing the dissertation out of which this book developed to completion. I am especially grateful for Dr. Jolly's discussion of the resurrection body. And it was in Dr. Kellogg's class that I first considered the idea of dismemberment as a topic of study, for which I am deeply indebted to her.

Great thanks as well to dissertation committee member Mark Heberle for his meticulous scholarship and his generous and careful reading, and for introducing me to the STC on microfilm, an invaluable resource before we had EEBO access! Much gratitude also goes to the late and much-missed Robert McHenry, who taught the first class focusing on early modern literature that I took, in which I discovered that I felt at home and happy in this time period.

I am so grateful to present and past members of the MIP, De Gruyter, and Integra teams for their skill, professionalism, and great patience. Thanks go especially to Erika Gaffney, who advocated for the book from the beginning and saw it through to completion with not only consummate expertise but also a generosity beyond the call of duty. Thank you very much also to editor-in-chief Theresa Whitaker, content editor Michaela Göbels, Rebecca Straple-Sovers, and project manager David Jüngst. The anonymous readers of my manuscript added much to its final completeness and form with their helpful queries and suggestions. And I am indebted to the astonishing and erudite reading of Leofranc Holford-Strevens, who went far beyond copy-editing to make this book far more accurate and usable than it would have been without him. Any errors that may remain are, of course, entirely my responsibility.

I owe so much to writing partner and dear friend April Ching, for her bravery in accepting drafts in all stages of incoherence and for the clear-sighted and kind criticism that has always improved them. I owe her as well for the tremendous amounts of work she did on the references and the index, which would certainly never have been completed without her kindness, as well as for support extending far beyond this book.

I am deeply thankful to my parents, who, while originally dubious about the subject matter, nevertheless have wholeheartedly supported me with love and affection. I am grateful to my sister Kiko Doi for her meticulous and generous work on the references and my stepmother Lizabeth Ball for her intelligent discussion, love, and encouragement. Thanks also to Cynthia Chi-Doi for the magic pens she provided to keep me writing!

Gratitude goes to the members of the Early Modern Forum, including Valerie Wayne, Elizabeth McCutcheon, Derek Higginbotham, Brenda Machosky, Matt Romaniello, Matt Lauzon, Mark Heberle, Urvashi Chakravarty, and the late Lew Andrews. They not only read several sections of the dissertation and/or the book manuscript and provided valuable feedback on them; they have also taught me so much through discussions and readings on a wide variety of topics.

Great gratitude also to friend and religion scholar Jack Collins for translations and discussion of various passages of Hebrew and Greek relating to the pilegesh of Judges 19, and for tracking down and sending me articles and information beyond the call of friendship.

I wish to thank the conveners, fellow presenters and seminar members, and audiences of several conference sessions and seminars at which I presented early versions of portions of these chapters, including the Shakespeare Association of America seminar on the “Non-Human Renaissance,” Durham University’s Medieval and Early Modern Student Association conference on “The Mutilated Body,” Oxford University’s Medieval Graduate conference on “Meat,” and Hull University’s conference on “Shakespeare and Early Modern Emotion.” I especially thank Richard Meek and Erin Sullivan, organizers of the latter conference, for their helpful insights into the book chapter included in their edited collection that developed out of my presentation, which shares some material with Chapter 4 of this book.

I am grateful to my former boss, Miles Hakoda, for his flexibility in allowing me to take time off to finish the dissertation from which this book arose and for arranging for assistance with my tasks at work – I have no doubt that I would still be writing had he not done so. Thanks also go to friend and co-worker Heidi Sakuma, who not only offered ideas and encouragement but also provided this assistance, freeing me to write.

Above all else, my tremendous thanks and love to Chris Wrenn. He read the entire book at least twice, helping to shape my perspective, clarify my arguments, and refine my writing. He reminded me of the importance of compassion, courage, and balancing the academic with the natural world. His prodigious work in converting all of the citations from MLA to Chicago was a lifesaver, as was his enormous help on the index! His intellectual curiosity and conviction are inspirations, and his support in many areas has sustained me.

Contents

Acknowledgements — V

Introduction: Attending to Bodies — 1

- The Presence of Bodies — 2
- (De)Humanizing — 9
- Time and Texts — 14
- The Subject(s) of Dismemberment — 16

Chapter 1: The Symbolic Body and the Performance of Dismemberment — 19

- Metaphor and Modification — 21
 - Embodiments — 23
 - “A head on headless Rome” — 32
 - Body Performance — 35
 - Reading and Writing (on) the Body — 39
- Fragmentations — 49
 - Glossing Cuts — 53
 - The Abstract(ed) Body — 60

Chapter 2: Gendered Dismemberments — 63

- Rape, Adultery, and Sexual Shame — 66
 - Reading and Resisting Rape — 66
 - Rape unto Death — 77
 - “Stuprum Chiron Demetrius” — 82
 - Women’s Quarters — 88
- Privy Members and Penal Cuts — 98
 - De-Sexing — 98
 - Sins of the Castrator — 105
 - Sinful and Spiritual Circumcisions — 116
 - Looking Forward — 125

Chapter 3: Animals of Dismemberment — 127

- The Hunt — 130
 - The Noble Chase — 130
 - “Woful hunting” and the “ill killed” Deer — 137
 - Human Quarry — 147
 - “The deer / That hath received some unrecuring wound” — 154
 - Metaphors of the Hunt — 157

Butchery — 163

Meat-Makers and Misrule — 165

Knights, Butchers, and Other Killers — 174

On the Other Side of the Line — 183

Chapter 4: The Anguish of the Dismemberer: Executioners and Others — 185

Rightful and Wrongful Dismemberers — 186

Executing Retribution: Private and Public Vengeance — 198

Reading the Headsman — 206

The Holiness of the Dismemberer — 216

Chapter 5: Coda: After Dismemberment — 221

The Afterlives of Body Parts — 223

The Tangible Sacred — 223

Relics of Infamy — 228

The German Custom — 231

“These two heads do seem to speak to me” — 235

Re-Membering and Resurrection — 237

Bibliography — 247

Index — 269