As it gets colder and rainier here in Spain, I'm finding myself falling into some of my habits from back home since it's harder to convince myself to go outside when I can't even see the sun. However, I still subscribe to the idea that you should adapt your life to where you are living while studying abroad. Thus I am here to teach you (and remind myself) how to take your passions abroad, or in other words, how to keep doing the things you love from home but use them as a way to explore the new culture you currently inhabit.

Are you a staff or faculty member that would like to invite study abroad to present to your students? Request a presentation from WMU Study Abroad and request a time frame that fits your needs.

Don't have time for a presentation this fall? Encourage your students to attend an information session in 2425 Ellsworth Hall. WMU Study Abroad hosts information sessions daily, no appointment necessary. Information sessions are an informal, individualized exploration of study abroad opportunities that match a student's academic degree program, geographic interests and budget.
