"Ever dreamed of being surrounded by ice and snow in a place with only 5 hours of daylight? I certainly didn't. Being a warm-loving person, the idea of the freezing cold tundra was the furthest thing from vacation I could imagine but spending a weekend in Tromsø, Norway helped to change my mentality around wintery vacations! ... While the idea of light flowing through a dark sky seemed intriguing, shortened days and even colder nights was making me a bit nervous. Luckily, my roommate Paula convinced me to join a trip she was planning for our close friends which we completed just last week."
