Joint international program in Malta accepting applications for 2010 classes

WMU's new joint international master's program with the University of Malta is accepting applications for classes that will begin in that Mediterranean nation in October 2010.

The collaborative master's-level program is structured to allow students to earn one master's degree in criminology and criminal justice studies from the University of Malta, and another in criminology, law and public policy from WMU.

Thirteen WMU faculty members from the departments of Political Science and Sociology will partner with faculty from the University of Malta—that country's flagship university—to teach course work in the program.

The collaboration between the two universities is designed as a novel international and interdisciplinary venture that combines the strengths of European and American graduate programs. The curriculum will include theory, research methods and data analysis as well as Mediterranean-based case studies on:

- gender, crime and justice
- environmental crime and justice
- surveillance and security
- state and corporate crime.

The University of Malta, which traces its origins to 1592, is one of the oldest universities in the Mediterranean. Today, the university has some 10,000 students, 750 of whom are foreign students from nearly 80 countries.

Additional information about the program can be found on the University of Malta's Web site at www.um.edu.mt/imp/content.aspx?id=168553. Information also can be found at www.wmich.edu/politics.

WMU study shows nonprofit EMOs growing steadily

In contrast with their for-profit counterparts, nonprofit education management companies are growing at a steady rate, a study recently released by researchers at WMU and two partner institutions has found.

The new report was released by WMU's College of Education and Human Development and the Education Policy Research Unit at Arizona State University and the Public Interest Center at the University of Colorado at Boulder. It finds that nonprofit EMOs are garnering more support and are growing steadily, while the growth of for-profit EMOs is slowing.

The study was compiled as part of the 2008-09 edition of "Profiles of Nonprofit Education Management Organizations" and comes after an earlier study examining for-profit EMOs. It was written by Gary Miron, WMU professor of educational leadership, research and technology, and Jessica Urschel, a WMU graduate research assistant. Miron and Urschel also co-wrote the for-profit EMO study with Alex Molnar, a professor at Arizona State University.

Michigan has been leading the way in hiring education management organizations to run charter and conventional public schools. The EMO sector emerged in the 1990s as part of an effort to use market forces to reform public education. Until recently, most attention has been

Filmmaker wins national award

Tom Ludwig, English, won a 2009 Voice Awards Honorable Mention for a documentary video titled “A Long Strange Trip” that he and local filmmaker Matt Clysdale directed. Ludwig teaches for the Kalamazoo Regional Educational Service Agency’s Education for the Arts program, and that program’s students provided production assistance for the video.

The Voice Awards are presented by the federal Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration, in part to honor those who incorporate dignified, respectful and accurate portrayals of individuals with mental health problems into film and television productions.

Ludwig joined the English department faculty as an instructor in 1998. Most of his work is in 16mm experimental film, but he has produced three documentary films and begun building a body of work in digital composite video.

Emeritus inducted into hall of fame

Daniel L. Stufflebeam, founding director of the Evaluation Center, has been inducted into the College of Education and Human Ecology’s 2009 Hall of Fame at Ohio State University.

Stufflebeam established OSU’s Evaluation Center in 1963 as well as created a doctoral program in evaluation and assessment at the university. After leaving OSU in 1973, he crafted the national Standards for Educational Evaluation and was principal author of the original U.S. standards for program and personnel assessment. He also founded and directed the federal Center for Standards for Research on Educational Accountability and Teacher Education. In 2007, Stufflebeam retired from WMU as a Distinguished University Professor and an emeritus in educational studies after 34 years of service to the University.

Prof brief Russians on research

Andrew Targowski, business information systems, and Richard Zinser, family and consumer sciences, presented papers at an international conference in Siberia, Russia, Nov. 18-19. The two also were nominated to the editorial board of a new journal called “Professional Education in Russia and Abroad.”

Prior to the conference, Targowski and Zinser visited the city of Novokuznetsk to meet with faculty at the Kuzbass State Pedagogical Academy, where they signed a letter of intent to collaborate on research and publication in the field of comparative education, culture and civilization.

The Russians have expressed interest in strengthening their ties with WMU.
Student fashion show benefits area homeless

The University’s student-run fashion show will be held Friday and Saturday, Dec. 4-5. Proceeds will benefit the Kalamazoo Gospel Mission, an organization that serves local homeless or abused men, women and children in Kalamazoo County.

The event, “MODA Glamour,” includes 30 student designers and 48 volunteer student models from WMU’s Merchandising Opportunities Design Association. Shows both nights will begin at 8 p.m. in the Bernard Center Ballroom, with doors opening at 6:30 p.m. for VIP ticket holders.

“This fall, we have chosen to give back to the local community by donating to the Kalamazoo Gospel Mission,” says MODA President Deonna Ansara. “It’s important to our organization to support those less fortunate, especially during the holiday season.”

Winter hours will soon begin for WMU’s snow removal crews.

The crews must plow, shovel, scrape and de-ice more than 23 miles of roads, 100 acres of parking, 39 miles of walks, 200,000 square feet of steps and ramps, and hundreds of doorways.

Winter weather rarely results in a decision to close WMU. But when there is a shutdown, news of the decision is posted on the University’s home page at www.wmich.edu and emergency information line at 387-1021.

After completing those notifications, University employees will communicate closure details to local television and radio stations.

Official closure of the main campus means the University’s branch campuses are also closed. However, closure of a branch campus does not automatically mean that the main campus will shut down as well.

Providing there is not a major storm, most campus areas will be clear of snow and ice before the majority of students and employees arrive each day. Flow schedules cover snow and ice removal activities 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

It should be noted, though, that freeze/thaw conditions can create special ice management challenges even when it does not snow.

As in past years, various spots around the campus that are deemed to be a convenience rather than a necessity will be closed for the winter, allowing crews to concentrate on major access areas.

Students, and faculty and staff members who have special mobility needs during the ice and snow season should call the landscape services office at 387-8557, as snow and ice removal schedules can be adjusted to accommodate needs.

Those making requests regarding weekend or other special activities also should direct their calls to that office. Callers are asked to provide as much advance notice as possible.

Questions or concerns after normal business hours should be directed to the Department of Public Safety at 387-5555.

focused on for-profit EMOs; however, new interest and private funds have been devoted to the nonprofit management sector.

“The nonprofit EMOs are diverse,” Mitro says. “Some of them charge similar fees and behave similarly to for-profit EMOs. An increasing number of the nonprofit EMOs, however, are actually bringing additional financial resources to the charter schools they operate. These are resources which they funnel from private foundations.”

Urschel says for-profit and nonprofit EMOs are changing the education landscape.

“Although this new form of privatization is less common among traditional public schools, EMOs now operate close to 30 percent of the nation’s charter schools,” Urschel notes.

Employee receptions
Receptions have been planned to salute an outgoing and an incoming employee.

• The WMU community is invited to attend a departmental retirement reception for Joan Rahn, a part-time mathematics instructor for many years. The event is set for noon to 2 p.m. Thursday, Dec. 10, and is open to the general public.

• Faculty and staff members are invited to attend a reception to introduce Dawn Gaymer, associate provost of Extended University Programs, to campus. The event is set for 3 to 5 p.m. Wednesday, Dec. 9, in the Oaks.

Findings from the report show that:

• Nonprofit EMOs operated public schools in half of the nation’s 50 states last year. Although Illinois has relatively few charter schools, it has the highest proportion—72 percent—of its charter schools managed by nonprofit EMOs.

• There are 103 nonprofit EMOs in the country, including 16 described in the report as “large,” managing 10 or more schools. Altogether, nonprofit EMOs managed 609 public schools in 2008-09. “Large” nonprofit EMOs managed nearly half—46 percent—of these.

• Growth in the number of different nonprofit EMOs has tapered off somewhat since 2004, while the number of schools they operate has continued to grow. This may indicate a trend toward consolidation.

On Campus with Joyce Gard
Joyce Gard, speech pathology and audiology, has had a career at WMU that has spanned more than 26 years, first as a secretary in the department and now as office coordinator after being promoted to that post in 1986.

Over the years, Gard has seen the department grow and change. When she joined the staff in 1983, the department was housed in the Speech and Hearing Center located on the East Campus, the University’s original site. Everything was handled in that 1930s-era building, from graduate and undergraduate classes to clinical and research facilities. Then the department moved in 2005 into the state-of-the-art Health and Human Services Building.

Gard came to WMU after the department’s founder, Charles Van Riper, retired as chair, but he gave her some advice that has stuck with her through the years.

“I had an opportunity to visit with him at his home in Portage one afternoon,” she remembers. “He gave me some words of wisdom that I try to live by: ‘Joyce, do something new each day you live, even if it is as simple as driving home from work a new way. That will help keep life interesting!’

In her role as office coordinator, Gard handles personnel matters for the department as well as grant troubleshooting, payroll and keeping expenses within budget. The precise accounting involved in her job at WMU is balanced nicely with her interest in art, which she indulges in outside of work. She received her bachelor’s degree from the former Nazareth College in Kalamazoo.

“When something doesn’t balance, I enjoy figuring out why. But when I’m home, I leave that behind and can just create,” she says. “It’s easy for me to talk about painting. I’m extremely visual.”

Some of Gard’s creations are displayed on campus. They include a painting called “The Larynx,” which is a colorful tribute to the late Robert Erickson, a former chair of her department. The work features deep reds and a video scope image of the vocal folds.

It hangs on the third floor of the University Medical and Health Sciences Center.

“The painting is my voice because it’s the way I express my thoughts,” Gard says. Along with creating art, Gard also likes to read, travel, exercise and watch hockey, as well as to spend time with her friends, two grown children, a son and daughter, and eight-year-old granddaughter.

Piano maker names WMU professor Steinway Artist
Steinway promises its artists a concert-ready Steinway wherever in the world they appear. The company has cultivated this special relationship with pianists in a wide range of genres for decades, from classical musicians such as Lief Ove Andsnes to pop artists such as Billy Joel.

Zegree was presented with the honor at a recent Gershwin concert in the Dalton Center. The concert also celebrated WMU’s quest to become an All-Steinway School and showcased the University’s collection of Steinway pianos.
