August 2019

'Art' They Can't See, Lines, Anatomy of Decomposing, October on Danford Creek, Wing Bone, and Taxidermy

Kailyn J. Dekker
Western Michigan University

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.wmich.edu/hilltopreview

Part of the Fiction Commons, Nonfiction Commons, and the Poetry Commons

Preferred Citation Style (e.g. APA, MLA, Chicago, etc.)
MLA
‘Art’ They Can’t See
Lines
Anatomy of Decomposing
October on Danford Creek
Wing Bone
Taxidermy

By Kailyn J. Dekker

The following document includes a selection and submission for the Hilltop Review. Within the file the reader will find five (5) poems and one (1) micro fiction piece. The poems are titled 'Art' They Can't See, Lines, Anatomy of Decomposing, October on Danford Creek, and Wing Bone. These poems incorporate darkness, illness, social issues, and a manifestation and exploration of the human condition. The Microfiction text titled Taxidermy, details the interaction between two siblings showcasing the younger sister's mental illness by detailing the delusional and obsessive behavior of this character.

These texts have been workshopped under the instruction of poets, William Olsen & Nancy Eimers and Fiction writer, Thisbe Nissen at Western Michigan University.
‘Art’ They Can’t See

They say,
   _I wish I could do that._
It is the childhood I never had
and I…
   Do you hate your reflection?
   Your frizzy hair, your upturned nose and the dimples in your thighs?

We hate the villain we became in our happily-never-fairytale, when we found pleasure in the scissor edge of pain
under our desks in kindergarten when we found the pleasure in the razor edge of pain locked in our rooms, wiping the tears of our mirrored reflections.

Conceal: our loaded guns, our blood soaked washcloths, our stash of Band-Aids, the necessary, not so necessary narcotics, _pain—_
The buzzing of some sort of art beneath our skin, we don’t crow—
our cloaks
because beneath we are scared, scarred, and hurt
it is our attempt at forgiveness—
we are sorr—
but they say,
I wish I could do that.
It is night terrors, screaming at fabricated demons
The ones from your childhood mutated
Into the ones
And I…
Can you find home in tears?
Your face to the tobacco-yellowed ceiling,
Rolling across your temples, Crawling
Like disappearing little spiders in your hair?

If this house is our home, if this body—
it’s not where our heart is.
Lost. Some time between watching our parents beat each other bloody (from the closet we locked ourselves in) and the day we walked home with blood from our broken hymens staining our underwear
but we deserved it because we walked alone.
We wore sweat pants and we deserved it because under our baggy clothes we were still girls, Soft peach fuzz hair and he just needs a taste,
we have boobs, puffy pink nipples,
Made to fulfill baby hunger. “ohh, baby”
They say,
I wish I could do that.
It is the raddle of my medicine drawer
full of tablets, capsules, a bag of weed,
no more emotion
and I…

We just smile,
that awkward,
mouth closed,
lips thinned,
curled, half-baked,
thankful,
not so thankful
smile.
Because we’re supposed to smile when they compliment
our bodies,
(the scars)
our art.
Lines

Somber, the night sings the solitude found swirling between stars
/
I can hear the echoing of black holes forming somewhere out of sight
/
The sun chugs like trucks on empty, choking, gasping, for fuel
/
Every sunflower seed came from a sunflower seed that came from a sunflower seed, back until the first sunflower seed was the first and even when it was the last of something not a sunflower seed
/
She watched as children kicked the heads off of dandelions and whispered to nobody, it prepares them for the ‘real world’
/
A child painted the sky, blotting and waving his father’s brushes, cotton candy, against dusk’s canvas.
/
Brush away the bone dust and fuse me together with wire.
/
He kissed my scars and cut me open, planted rage in my bone marrow and watched as this poison painted me pale.
/
I am Hera’s rage, her jealousy and humanity
/
Paralytic is the rage that goes unnourished
/
Nourish the urge to be—
/
We’ve died a thousand times and continue—
/
The scent of Formaldehyde dripped into lungs, suffocating—
/
Cradle the brains of animals in hands not stained with their blood.
/
Squeeze the vision from my occipital lobe and infuse it with every memory I can no longer see.
/
Spinal cord severed, vertebrae sewn with Elm root.
/
Tendrils around my neck, Morning Glory my noose.
/
Cries bubble from keyholes, drip and stain the carpet
/
They lock their free spirits behind manicured suits and ties
/
She whispered Sarin, like a siren’s song
Anatomy of Decomposing

Meteors drip from the sky
like mist soaked wisteria blooms aching for soil hanging heavy, like fruit.
I am a bee,
   knees soaked in honey
   crusted with sweet,
dream caught in the sap oozing between moss covered bark coagulated a scab an amalgam of decomposing.

And the spider weaves lips shut,
and the wind ceases to blather mocked by the song echoed down roads before dawn.

I’ve collapsed under the weight of raindrops,
welcomed them to explore my scalp between shafts of hair.
I’ve dug fingertips in mud grasping for something solid.
The worms crawl through my roots and the earth unforgiving needles the stem of a dahlia through my Cerebellum my Arbor Vitea to bloom in my mouth;
   petals for plucking,
teeth for pulling.

You love me not
You love me
October on Danford Creek

The detectives had faces fashioned like rose quartz. Pounding with rubber mallet fists on empty apartment doors.

I watched them, fish lens, through the peephole, shoving a single business card in the frame near the brassy knob whispering billingsgate, peaking in windows, pressing soggy leaves into the “welcome” mat with their shiny shoes.

*

October mornings are shallow clouds grey and drag their belly’s low. Drains clogged by leaf patties, wet roads momentarily remember the print of tires then forgotten by mist glaze.

*

It never fails, dog sees squirrel, chipmunk, toad, dog, human and charges, face first, into a saliva smeared slider.
Vertical blinds like rotting teeth, missing 2, 3, dirty and yellowed.

Every gust scooted leaf is a toad and every scraping of dry leaves on concrete, a squirrel.
October is a dumb dog, a companion
when the thunder shakes the house.

*

The pea coats knocked my door with unsatisfied knuckles.
Badges on leashes,
always lunging—
untrained dogs.

I like my neighbors, murder suspects or not. Neighbors don’t need fences, just unexpected cookies and a pseudo-sincere, Hey...
Wing Bone

I tied her scapulae together
by wrapping copper wire around the coracoid process like the orange spiral around healing stone jewelry.
Acromion tapping acromion
as I tested the metal joint,
like a pen on a desk in a cement room,
a hollowing density.
Forefinger finding comfort in the bloodless veins
of the infraspinous fossa
where my black would be painted if I were small enough to cocoon myself in the glenoid cavity—
    fly away a monarch.
Taxidermy

The radio was whispering advertisements when I pulled up to the apartment complex. Sis was smoking a cigarette at the weather abused picnic tables. She skipped to the car, her hair skipping out of sync with her, purse flopping about.

“Did you hear?” Her buckteeth protruded out of a smile and before I could even think of what she was referring to she continued, “Jack White finally bought a house in Kalamazoo, its fate, KayDee!”

“Oh yeah?.”

“Do you want to drive by his house? I have the address!”

“Nope…”

“You’re right, I should get him a gift first.” She buckled herself in and took a breath. The kind of breath that in Disney movies meant she was completely in love, head-over-heels in love.

Not too long ago she was in love with Seth MacFarlane. Her phone background was a pixelated headshot of him. She’d talk to him occasionally as if he were on the phone and would discreetly caress his face when she thought I wasn’t looking. After Seth was Kurt Cobain. Her love for him was memorizing his life story and weaving herself into it.

“I have to get him a really good gift or else he won’t go on a date with me.” She jotted notes on the back of a receipt she found in the median of my car. Her thoughts were an acid trip. They were irrational, scary at times, and to her, always epiphanic, to me they were cacophonous. She used to be the stereotypical good-girl-gone-bad but after meth replaced alcohol she started to display schizophrenic thought processes and they only got worse after she stopped smoking dope and worst after she stopped taking her Adderall. Too afraid they would lock her away, arms crossed over her chest, she never sought help.

She read a list of gift idea aloud as they came to mind and were written down. “A bagpipe…a puppy…a big cross, like the ones on churches…a neon light of the number three…a black and yellow, upholstered, Victorian-looking chair…taxidermy…”

“Stop, you’re hurting my head.”

“I should get him taxidermy! He has an elephant head already.”

I pulled into a café and waited in the car so Sis could get some food and coffee. She’s been living off of unemployment for 5 months collecting as much as I earn working 30 hours a week. Honestly, I was a little envious. 29 and ready to retire but checking out early… sounds so suicidal.

“What do you call those rabbit hybrid things?” she asked while shuffling back into the passenger seat.

“A Jackalope?”

“Where can I find one of those?”
I didn’t say anything, just smiled while she Googled ‘Where do Jackalopes live’. “Why don’t you just kill some squirrels and call it good?”
“Squirrels aren’t special, Jack White has an ELEPHANT HEAD!”
“So kill two and fashion the one with the other one’s skull… Hamlet style.” She looked confused so I continued, “To be or not to be?”
“That is the question” she replied in her deepest voice. “I can put antlers on them!”