1964

Wynken, Blynken and What's the Use Anyway

Catherine Stripe

Western Michigan University

Follow this and additional works at: http://scholarworks.wmich.edu/calliope

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Stripe, Catherine (1964) "Wynken, Blynken and What's the Use Anyway," Calliope: Vol. 12 : Iss. 1 , Article 18. Available at: http://scholarworks.wmich.edu/calliope/vol12/iss1/18

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the English at ScholarWorks at WMU. It has been accepted for inclusion in Calliope by an authorized editor of ScholarWorks at WMU. For more information, please contact maira.bundza@wmich.edu.
They gave him a black box for his birthday--
One of those things with lights,
That blinks and winks for one year,
Then stops--
Having done nothing, tried nothing, given nothing,
Highly mechanized, highly organized, decorative, attention-getting, and
Completely meaningless.

We watched it for a while in amusement.
"What does it mean?" he said--with just a trace of apprehension.
"Nothing! Nothing at all!" we said.
But someone put in sarcastically,
"It's life."
We all laughed.
For a minute I thought he was going to cry.
"Isn't there any way of making it good for something?"
"Good for what? It's got no purpose."
"Then why keep it going? Can't it be stopped?"
"Not unless you break the box."
"I'm afraid to--
What would happen to me if I broke it?"
They laughed--"Nothing would happen to you. Nothing at all!"
"But that's what I'm afraid of--"
They chuckled, half impatiently. "Talk sense.
It's stupid to break it, and you can't do anything with it so don't try."
"Even if I feel I should try?"
A snort "Like to see you try--what do you expect to accomplish?"
He hung his head, frowning.

"Stop brooding and enjoy your party."
"All right--all right," he said at last.
They all breathed a sigh of relief and he ate some birthday cake and played games and had fun and forgot to wonder about the black box
Which gave nothing, tried nothing, did nothing
For the rest of its days.

Catherine Stripe