Gwen Frostic to speak April 4

Well-known artist and entrepreneur Gwen Frostic will speak at 7 p.m. Tuesday, April 4, in the Red Rooms of the Bernhard Center.

Frostic, a 1929 WMU graduate, owns and manages Gwen Frostic Prints and Presscraft Papers, a company she founded in Benzonia, Mich., more than 20 years ago. In her talk, she is expected to address creativity, knowledge and the importance of dreams.

The event is sponsored by the WMU Student Alumni Association.

Center to continue evaluation of urban development

The John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation has awarded WMU's Evaluation Center a 26-month $386,000 renewal contract to continue serving as the external evaluator of a Chicago urban development program.

The Evaluation Center, under the direction of Daniel L. Stufflebeam, will continue efforts begun last spring to implement a comprehensive evaluation of the foundation's $11 million Fund for Community Development. The FCD is a seven-year effort, begun in 1987, that is providing funds to the Chicago program of the Local Initiatives Support Corporation to support up to 30 Community Development Corporations for the purpose of improving housing, commerce and industry in Chicago neighborhoods.

Community Development Corporations receiving funds through the project range from those with a focus on rehabilitating and managing neighborhood apartment buildings and hotels to those working toward refurbishing abandoned factories for use in attracting business and industry back into the neighborhood.

"One of the reasons this work is so interesting," Stufflebeam says, "is that it represents a change in how our society addresses urban problems. In the 1960s and '70s, schools were being held accountable and it was thought that problems like segregation could be solved through the schools. Now we know that much of the problem wasn't in the schools. It was a real estate problem."

The community development groups, some of which began as advocacy groups, he says, raise the possibility of "using grassroots power to address problems not just in the schools, but in the neighborhoods."

An Evaluation Center team began work on the project last spring by visiting and developing in-depth site profiles of each existing Community Development Corporation involved in the FCD. Profiles of the 10 current sites recently have been completed and the center will undertake site profiles of approximately 20 additional corporations expected to be selected to receive FCD funds in the coming months.

Stufflebeam says the first year of work for the MacArthur Foundation has been "a very productive and challenging experience." He cites application of evaluation techniques to the field of community development as a particular challenge. The Evaluation Center's work initially was focused on assessing the quality of educational programs. In recent years, however, the center has expanded its activities into several non-education areas.

"In the FCD evaluation, we've had a chance to apply the principles of educational evaluation in a very different setting," Stufflebeam says. "We've found that those principles transfer well to community development evaluation."

Stufflebeam says that an important aspect of the work has been that in evaluating the Community Development Corporations -- which vary in size, mission and cultural make-up -- WMU personnel have needed to deal with multiple audiences.

"We're really doing three evaluations," he says. "One is for the foundation, which wants to answer general questions about the effectiveness of the FCD. The others are for the Local Initiatives Support Corporation and for the individual community corporations, which want feedback on more specific, localized concerns."

In addition to developing individual site profiles, the MacArthur Foundation has charged the Evaluation Center with the task of implementing an overall program evaluation of the FCD, and documenting the program's impact and the effectiveness of design and administration.

The MacArthur Foundation, which is based in Chicago, has three main objectives it is trying to accomplish through the FCD, Stufflebeam says. The first objective is to strengthen the Community Development Corporations

Judges to hand down decision on role of Constitution today

Enslen

Lamb

Judges Richard A. Enslen and Richard Ryan Lamb will participate in a symposium on "The Constitutional Debate Today: The Judicial Perspective" at 8 p.m. Wednesday, April 5, in 3770 Knauss Hall.

Enslen, U.S. District judge for the Western District of Michigan, and Lamb, chief judge of the Kalamazoo 9th Circuit Court, will make presentations on current issues surrounding the interpretation of the Constitution. They are expected to address such topics as representation, individual rights, the relationship of the states to the federal government, governmental organization and the role of government in society. The moderator will be Ralph C. Chandler, political science.

The symposium is the final program in a year-long series celebrating the bicentennial of the Constitution by commemorating the ratification debates that took place in the states between 1787 and 1789. The series has focused on the major issues which inflamed public discussion at that time and which still are debated today.

The series is being sponsored by the Office of the Provost and Vice President for Academic Affairs.

Molde's Marauders moving tickets

Bronco football coach Al Molde has unveiled his newest team. Though its members may not be able to help the 1989 squad when it comes to intercepting passes or running for touchdowns, they'll be supporting the WMU gridders in other ways.

Nicknamed "Molde's Marauders," the team is comprised of faculty and staff members who will be contacting their colleagues during April to encourage them to buy season football tickets. Their efforts are part of a larger, community-wide campaign that begins Tuesday, April 4. The goal for the campaign is to sell 2,500 season tickets by the end of the month.

"In past years, we've sold about 1,200 season tickets," says Dan Summy, intercollegiate athletics. "We figure there are a lot of people interested who haven't bought -- they just need to be approached by someone they know."

So Summy has organized five groups of volunteers. In addition to the Marauders, there will be groups contacting: people who had season tickets last year; people who had single game tickets last year and might want to upgrade to season tickets; alumni in Kalamazoo; and colleagues, neighbors and friends.

The groups are headed by Bronco football coaches, with Molde acting as a "floating coach" to work with all of them. Leading the Marauders are assistant coaches Jeff D. Briggs and Marty P. Higgins. The captain of the team is John A. Kundel, student financial aid and scholarships.

"The spirit of Western and the enthusiasm for Western entails many aspects of our lives and activities on campus -- and football is a part of that," Kundel says. "Every little bit that faculty, staff, students and friends can contribute helps make Western a fantastic place to be, to live and to work."

The volunteers will be contacting people by telephone, by mail and in person. The groups will be competing for team and individual awards. The cost for season tickets is $30 for faculty and staff members or $37 for the general public.

Kundel says that while his team may lack athletic prowess, he feels that it is of championship calibre when it comes to selling tickets. And he hopes the group's efforts will help make every crowd in Waldo Stadium the size of the one for the WMU vs. CMU game last year.

"While athletics teaches many things about teamwork and discipline and sacrifice for the participants, it's also great entertainment for the fans," Kundel says. "We hope it all comes together to make everybody enthusiastic about Western and proud to represent WMU."

Faculty and staff members interested in purchasing season tickets or in helping put the Marauders in motion should contact Kundel at 7-6000.

Haenicke to chair research libraries board

President Haenicke has been elected chairperson of the board of directors of the Center for Research Libraries in Chicago.

The organization is comprised of 138 university college and research libraries throughout North America that participate in cooperative collection development programs to increase the availability of research materials to the scholarly community.

The center's official mission states that it is a not-for-profit corporation established and operated by scholarly and research institutions to strengthen the library and information resources for research and to enhance the accessibility of those resources. The center functions as a cooperative, membership-based research library that acquires, stores, preserves, provides bibliographic access to and lends/delivers from its collections of 3.6 million volumes and 1.1 million microforms.

Michigan members of the center besides WMU are the University of Michigan, Michigan State University and Wayne State University.

Haenicke has served this past year as the center board's vice chairperson. He succeeds as chairperson James F. Govan, University librarian at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

SENIOR CITIZENS PROM -- About 225 senior citizens, 70 students and several administrators turned out for the "Senior Citizens Prom" on March 22 in the Bernhard Center. Organized by several student groups, the evening featured a return to the "Big Band" sound heard at senior proms in bygone days. Here, Betty Wilson Futymoski, center, a member of the WMU class of 1939 from Kalamazoo, gives some instructions on steps to Erica Bebiak, left, a freshman from Naperville, Ill., and William R. Lembke, right, a junior from Jackson. The event was designed to get WMU students and senior citizens together for a good time and to show WMU students what life might have been like at WMU 50 years ago.

Business faculty to present research findings

Research presentations by 24 faculty members in the Haworth College of Business and an address by a marketing research professional will be among the highlights of a day-long research conference at the Fetzer Center Wednesday, April 5.

The conference will begin at 8:30 a.m. and conclude with a reception at 4:15 p.m. Business faculty, University administrators and members of the local business community are expected to attend.

Sponsored by Dean Darrell G. Jones, business, and the college's mentoring team, the conference will feature the work of faculty members who have received Dean's Research Grants since the award program was initiated by the college in 1987. According to mentoring team chairperson Jay D. Lindquist, marketing, the purpose of the conference is "to showcase one of the programs aimed at strengthening and encouraging scholarly efforts" among members of the college's faculty.

A noon luncheon is planned for those attending the conference. Following a welcome extended by President Haenicke, Franklin Acito will deliver an address titled, "The Faculty Research Bridge Between Business and the Business Classroom: Critical Contemporary Issues." Formerly a professor in the Graduate School of Business at Indiana University, Acito is now vice president of marketing services for Walker Research and Analysis in Indianapolis.

Acito's address, Lindquist says, will focus on the role of research and writing by business faculty members and its contribution to both university teaching and the business community. He also will discuss the way that mentoring can help in faculty development and will examine contemporary concerns such as ethics in research and the impact of technology.

Morning and afternoon conference sessions will be broken up into seven sections, each featuring the work of faculty researchers from three different departments in the college. The sessions are organized on the basis of the method of research used. The inclusion of different disciplines in each session, Lindquist says, is designed to encourage "the emerging interaction among research scholars throughout the college."

Among the 29 research projects that will be described at the conference are those with such titles as: "Women and Time"; "Michigan Medical Malpractice Reform"; "Investment Performance of Socially Conscious vs. Unrestricted Funds"; and "The State of the Art in Microcomputer Courses in U.S. and Canadian Business Schools."

Scholar to discuss future of history in schools

"The Future of World History in American Schools and Universities" will be the topic of a talk at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, April 4, in 3321 Brown Hall.

Ross E. Dunn, professor of history at San Diego State University, will be making the presentation during a two-day stint at WMU as part of the Visiting Scholars Program.

He also will speak at 3:30 p.m. Tuesday in 3020 Friedmann Hall on "Ibn Battuta: International Traveler and Job Seeker of the 14th Century." At 3:30 p.m. Wednesday, April 5, he will lead a discussion with history and social studies educators on "Exploring Links Across Time and Place" in the Faculty Lounge of the Bernhard Center.

An authority in North African and Islamic history, Dunn has been a major figure in developing the theory and practice of teaching global history. He is the senior author of "A World History:

WMU joins group to promote student volunteers

Student volunteerism at the University and in the state is getting a big boost with the establishment of the Michigan Compact. The compact, of which Western is a member, was announced at a news conference March 29 in East Lansing.

Dean Faith Gabelnick, Honors College, participated in the news conference as the University's liaison to the compact.

The mission of the Michigan Compact is to encourage greater participation in community service activities by the state's university and college students. The organization will work to create or expand voluntary service opportunities and to promote academic programs and public policies that support community service.

"Our goal is to foster campus-based community service programs open to all students at the University," Gabelnick said. "Our first step is to assess existing student volunteer activities through surveys to be administered soon."

Gabelnick is the chairperson of a WMU compact committee. Its members include Thomas E. Coyne, vice president for student services; James C. Petersen, sociology; and Theresa A. Powell, dean of students. Petersen has been associated with the local Voluntary Action Center.

"Plans include a volunteer opportunities fair this fall with the help of the Voluntary Action Center," Gabelnick said. "It will bring to the campus several dozen agencies in the Kalamazoo area to talk with students about their potential involvement."

This winter, the Honors College has sponsored a series of five speakers titled "Leadership and Community Service: Preparing to Make a Difference." It was supported in part by grants from the National Collegiate Honors Council and the Kalamazoo Consortium for Higher Education.

"The Honors College is taking the lead on campus to raise awareness about the need for volunteerism," Gabelnick said. "We intend to promote specific volunteer projects and, through a course in the Honors College, we hope to educate students about the pressing issues in the area where students may volunteer their time and skills."

"We're seeking to promote the concept of leadership and community service among all students," she said.

The Michigan Compact, initiated in May 1988, is affiliated with Campus Compact, a national project of the Education Commission of the States in Denver. The national organization was founded in 1985.

The Michigan Compact has been established with a three-year grant of $444,000 from the W.K. Kellogg Foundation of Battle Creek. It is based at Michigan State University, where the news conference took place. Its founding members include Albion College, Hope College, Lansing Community College, MSU and Northern Michigan University.

Shakespearean expert to speak

An expert on the works of playwright William Shakespeare will give two presentations Wednesday, April 5, in 1114 Brown Hall.

Felicia Londre, a faculty member at the University of Missouri at Kansas City, will discuss "Putting 'Macbeth' on Stage" at 9 a.m. In addition, she will speak on "'Hamlet' as a Cultural Mirror of Society on the Soviet and World Stages" at 4 p.m.

Holocaust memorial planned

The worldwide remembrance of the Jewish plight during the Holocaust and its 6 million victims will be commemorated locally with two events Wednesday and Thursday, April 5-6.

The commemoration will begin at 8 p.m. Wednesday with an interfaith service in Stetson Chapel at Kalamazoo College. The service will include musical performances, readings and reflections.

At 8 p.m. Thursday, David S. Wyman, professor of history at the University of Massachusetts, will speak in Kanley Chapel. His address, "Lessons of the Holocaust," will be followed by a question and answer period.

The local commemoration is being sponsored by the five institutions of higher education in Kalamazoo, including WMU, and the Jewish Federation.

Public presentation set on multiple intelligences

The first in a series of public presentations to go with the cable television series on "Multiple Intelligences" (see page two of last week's Western News) is scheduled for Tuesday, April 4.

David S. DeShon, social science, will lead the session at 7:30 p.m. in the Library Auditorium at Nazareth College. He will discuss the first program in the series, in which he provides an introduction and an overview of the multiple intelligences concept. The program will air at 4 p.m. Sunday, April 2, and at 10 p.m. Wednesday, April 5, on Kalamazoo Community Access Television Channel 30.

Fenton named 'Woman of the Year' On Campus

Mary Frances Fenton, education and professional development, has been named "Woman of the Year" by WMU's Commission on the Status of Women.

Fenton

Fenton, who directs the faculty graphics service in the College of Education, will receive the award at a luncheon at noon Wednesday, April 12, in the West Ballroom of the Bernhard Center. Seven nominees for the award also will be honored. The speaker will be Carol A. Waszkiewicz of Kalamazoo, chairperson of the Board of Trustees.

A member of the faculty since 1966, Fenton has a distinguished record as an educator, researcher, artist and women's advocate. She has taught numerous courses in teacher education and women's studies, often focusing on the effects of sexism in education.

She was a graphics consultant for the nationally recognized 1974 slide-tape presentation, "Sex Bias in Children's Textbooks," which gave impetus to publishers to change their portrayal of women in textbooks.

As a biographical/historical researcher, she has investigated the role of women in art, education and society. She has written extensively on the life and works of Malvina Hoffman, an American sculptor. Most recently, she served as project chairperson of "The History of Women in Education in Greater Kalamazoo," a tabloid sponsored by the Kalamazoo Women's History and Research Network and published as a supplement to the Feb. 27 Western Herald. She has conducted research about women's roles in intercollegiate sports, American Indian cultures and matriarchal societies.

Fenton's concern for women's issues also is reflected in her art. Her works have appeared in numerous women's art exhibitions, and her sculpture, "Bronco," was selected in 1984 to serve as a tribute to distinguished alumna Merze Tate. In 1977, Fenton was a founding member of Matrix, the first feminist art group in Kalamazoo.

Fenton's career also reflects longstanding efforts to support various women's advocacy groups. In 1972, she became the first president of the Commission on the Status of Women. For 15 years, she has served as the commission's mentor to faculty and staff women pursuing grievance procedures related to sex-biased discriminatory practices. In addition, she has provided leadership to women's equity and affirmative action committees on both the University and state levels.

The seven other nominees who will be honored are: Susan Creighton, St. Aidan's Chapel; Cindy L. Hooper, a senior majoring in social work from Kalamazoo; Doris J. Moore, College of Engineering and Applied Sciences, who is vice president of the Clerical/Technical Organization; Elaine L. Phillips, Counseling Center; Pamela K. Spray, music, who is president of the Clerical/Technical Organization; De Anna Ruth Terrell, a senior majoring in computer information systems from Muskegon; and Shirley A. VanHoeven, communication.

In addition, the Women's Exchange, a two-year-old women students advocacy group, will receive an honorable mention.

Special recognition will be given to one other nominee, Elissa L. Gatlin, Center for Human Services. Gatlin died March 5 at age 40. To honor Gatlin's legacy to the University and community, the commission will make a contribution to the scholarship fund being established in her name in the College of Health and Human Services.

Persons may make reservations for the luncheon, which is open to the public, by sending a check, payable to the Women's Commission/WMU, for $6 per person by Friday, April 7, to Shirley A. Ray, handicapper student services.

HAT TRICK -- Robert A. Higgins wears three hats in his job at printing services. He's a camera operator, making negatives from the customer's or from typeset copy. He's a platemaker, making plates to be run on the presses. And he's a stripper, arranging negatives in the proper order and putting pictures in the publications where they should be. These different "hats," plus many different jobs that come his way each day keep his work interesting and enjoyable, he says. "I've never had a day when I didn't want to come to work," says Higgins, who has worked in printing services for 20 years. He can work on as many as 20 jobs a day, depending on how complicated they are. Higgins says he likes working at the University because of the extra kinds of activities available. "There are a lot of benefits to working here that people often don't realize," he says, "like the Zest for Life Program, the sports events and the shows at Miller Auditorium." Higgins says he also enjoys meeting the variety of people on campus. "I get to meet a lot of nice people I wouldn't ordinarily get to meet," says Higgins, who originally is from Mendon. "There are more people at the University than in the whole town I'm from."

Greenberg selected for teaching recognition program

Gilda M. Greenberg, humanities and social science, will be among the faculty members from across the country honored at the 1989 American Association for Higher Education's National Conference on Higher Education in Chicago April 2-5.

Greenberg

She has been chosen as WMU's delegate to take part in a special "Stand and Deliver" Teaching Recognition Program that is being conducted in conjunction with the conference.

Selected from among nominations by WMU academic deans, chairpersons and directors, Greenberg will be honored at a public salute during an opening keynote event Sunday evening, April 2. She also will be cited in a special issue of Change magazine, and will participate in a program at the conference designed to give delegates an opportunity to share information on effective teaching.

The AAHE conference theme this year is "Stand and Deliver: Succeeding Against the Odds." It is based on the 1988 film, "Stand and Deliver," which tells the true story of Jaime Escalante, an unconventional teacher in a Los Angeles barrio high school plagued by unmotivated students. Through his powerful teaching methods, Escalante is enabling record numbers of students to excel in calculus. Escalante will speak at the conference.

Those nominated for the award were to represent the kind of powerful teaching that enables students to succeed "against the odds."

"Professor Greenberg will represent us well because of her reputation as an outstanding teacher," said Provost George M. Dennison. "She stands very tall in the Escalante mold, as her students and peers attest."

A 1983 winner of the WMU Alumni Teaching Excellence Award, Greenberg has been a WMU faculty member since 1973. In addition to teaching in the humanities and social science area, she served as director of the Women's Studies Program from 1982-85. Before coming to Western, she taught at the University of Tennessee, Tennessee State University, George Peabody College and Fisk University, all in Nashville. She also was a teacher for the Bureau of Indian Affairs in Fort Wingate, N.M., and Gallup, N.M.

"Dr. Greenberg has had a long and distinguished career, the central feature of which is her focus on expanding the horizons of those who have traditionally been excluded from full opportunity to develop and to achieve," said a letter from colleagues nominating her for the award.

"This was the quest which took her to live and teach on a remote Indian reservation," it continued, "to join the faculty of a black university and to work in the Women's Studies Program at Western Michigan University."

Greenberg is the co-author of two books, "Education of the American Indian in Today's World" and "Guide to Resources in Women's Studies at Western Michigan University Libraries." The latter was designed to provide easier access to women's studies materials in the WMU libraries for those persons interested in knowledge and research relating to women. It was targeted especially at beginners who might feel overwhelmed with finding such materials for research and study.

"Dr. Greenberg's approach has been to encourage the development in her students of an enhanced self-concept through expanding their knowledge base and improving their critical thinking and communication skills," the nomination letter said. "She not only motivates, she assists her students in acquiring the means to achieve."

42 to be honored as Presidential Scholars

President Haenicke will give the address at the ninth annual Presidential Scholars Convocation Thursday, April 6, at the Fetzer Center.

During the event, 42 seniors will be honored as Presidential Scholars. The award is WMU's highest honor to a senior. Seniors are nominated for the award by faculty members of the academic department in which they have a major. They are selected on the basis of general academic excellence, achievement in the department's programs and intellectual and/or artistic promise.

Stanley S. Robin, president of the Faculty Senate, will preside. In addition to speaking, Haenicke will present certificates to the scholars. The event, described as "truly a celebration of the excellence of Western's students," is sponsored by the Faculty Senate and the Office of the President.

Each Presidential Scholar invites as his or her guest a faculty member from the department. Also invited to attend are this year's recipients of the Distinguished Faculty Scholar Award.

The convocation committee is comprised of: Thomas E. Coyne, vice president for student services; Joe Gagie, executive director of public relations and communications; Dean Robert H. Luscombe, fine arts; Linda L. Patterson, special assistant to the president; and Robert P. Stoddard, Faculty Senate, who chairs the committee.

The Presidential Scholars Convocation will begin with a reception at 5:30 p.m., followed by dinner and the program.

Senate

The Research Policies Council of the Faculty Senate will meet at 3 p.m. Thursday, April 6, in Conference Room C on the third floor of the Seibert Administration Building. Agenda items include a discussion of the Drug Free Workplace Policy and of misconduct in research and creative activities.

Media

David S. DeShon, social science, discusses an alternative to the traditional view of IQ called "multiple intelligences" on "Focus," a five-minute radio interview produced by the Office of Public Information. "Focus" is scheduled to air Saturday, April 1, at 6:10 a.m. on WKPR-AM (1420) and at 5:45 p.m. on WKZO-AM (590).

"Poets in Their Time: Tales from the Cree," a program produced by media services for Kalamazoo Community Access Television, will air four times the week of April 3. The program features poet and translator Howard Norman talking about the folklore of the Cree Indians. The program will air at: 6 p.m. Monday, April 3, on Channel 31; 6 p.m. Tuesday, April 4, on Channel 31; 6 p.m. Wednesday, April 5, on Channel 33; and 7 p.m. Thursday, April 6, on Channel 32.

so they become fiscally viable, well managed corporations with clearly defined goals. The second objective is to increase the involvement of the community in the work of the corporation, empowering community members to play an effective role in developing the neighborhoods. The third objective is to help the corporations do an effective job in developing, marketing and managing real estate.

"Our overall research objective is to monitor each corporation to see how much improvement there is in meeting these objectives," Stufflebeam says.

To do that effectively, he says, the Evaluation Center team must study and record information about the environment in which each corporation operates. The effects of such variables as interest rates, grant availability, city politics, city planning, crime, competition from private developers and the pressures of gentrification are all factors that must be considered, he says.

In addition to looking at the impact of the FCD on the individual corporations, Stufflebeam says the center team also is being asked to evaluate the services being delivered by the FCD such as workshops, consultation and the provision of information.
