Electronic conferencing system debuts at WMU before national introduction

A new electronic conferencing system that is expected to be introduced nationally soon is undergoing its final test at WMU. An on-site visit will be made on the final test site, Confer II system developed by Advertel and first used at the University of Michigan. The new system is designed for use on Digital's VAX/VMS computers, offering conferencing capabilities to a wider range of users. The original system was developed for use on IBM equipment.
