a bubble bath

small popping against your skin the water now clear
the
drip
 drip
 drip
of the faucet
ice cold
against your toes
you see your body in the water a light blue tint of flesh you see your:
stretch marks
scars
freckles
cellulite
rolls
greasy hair
wrinkles
body hair
bruises
pimples
and unpainted nails
all cocooned in the lukewarm water you don't hate what you see you don't love it

you accept it.

you emerge from the cocoon
the diamond rivulets
running down your flushed skin

you unplug the drain
a tornado of water
released in the pipes
drip
 drip
 drip
silenced.

you pick up the now empty plastic bottle from its place on the shelf the label worn from over-usage

the soapy liquid
for sensitive skin
has finally run out

you aren't happy
you aren't sad

you accept it.

because you can take a bath without bubbles now.
