KOSTANDI STEPHENSON

A Lady's Broken Heart

A heart past broken, still unhealed
Laid still within a lady's breast
With promise planted yet no yield
And ache and hunger without rest

As sorrow stained her fairest face
And dark and shadow stole her breath
A valiant soldier armed with grace
Did come to save her from cold death

T'was honor brandished by his sword
A softer heart and mind renew
Delivered him her love's award
A noble prize, triumphed and true

His lips at last did mend her heart
While wedded neath the silver stars
She finally found her missing part
Lo, beauty with no tears nor scars

Love
