Joe Gross received a Master of Fine Arts in Literature and Creative Writing from Western Michigan University in 2010, along with the departmental Research/Creative Scholar Award. Since December, 2009, his essays, poems, and stories have appeared in Alaska Quarterly Review, Atticus Review, Cider Press Review, Foundling Review, Fourth Genre, Eclectica Magazine, Mid-American Review, Redivider, Salamander, SmokeLong Quarterly, Summerset Review, and Tipton Poetry Journal. He has a new essay forthcoming in Ninth Letter.

After a year of adjunct teaching at WMU and Kalamazoo Valley Community College, Joe has been hired as the Assistant Director and Youth Librarian of the Ransom District Library in Plainwell, Michigan. There he leads writing workshops for adults and children, runs a free guitar club for all ages, gets lost in the stacks, reads to the pre-K crowd from an oversized rocking chair, and has learned about more kinds of glue than he ever thought existed.

Joe still lives in Kalamazoo with his wife, Angela, and their two children (Isaac and Sofia, ages 2 and 5).
Dear Friends:

It’s been a tremendous year in the WMU English Department. Let me begin with some farewells:

We’ve been privileged to honor the retirements and careers of four outstanding faculty: Beth Amidon, a dedicated and loyal teacher and faculty member who exemplifies dedication to students and commitment to teaching excellence (and, I might add, she’s the editor of this newsletter, too); Tom Bailey, a legendary figure and public scholar at WMU who has served our department, university, and our community for over 40 years; Ellen Brinkley, the founder and guiding force of the Third Coast Writing Project, an organization that has directly affected hundreds of local teachers and their students; and Jaimy Gordon, one of the most recognized and accomplished fiction writers in the 110 year history of WMU. We’re going to miss all of them. Together, these four outstanding scholars and teachers dedicated nearly 140 years of service to our department, and I offer them our fondest wishes in the next stages of their lives.

We also say goodbye to Richard Utz, professor and our former department chair, who is leaving to become chair of the School of Literature, Communication, and Culture at Georgia Institute of Technology. We wish the best for Richard and give our thanks for his leadership and dedication to our department.

One of the highlights for me this past year was our annual awards ceremony, where we were proud to host our distinguished alumna, Bonnie Jo Campbell. Bonnie Jo gave a talk to our students and recounted her journey towards English studies and writing; later, she also read from recent novel, Once Upon A River, to a packed audience in WMU Bernhard Center. Even more exciting that evening, though, was having the opportunity to reward and celebrate all our students’ achievements. Thanks to our many departmental supporters and our faculty, we were able to give awards to nearly fifty outstanding students – freshman through senior; first year MA to finishing PhD – for their excellence in our classroom discussions and in-print – we are amazed at what our students are able to accomplish. Congratulations to all our award winners, and thank you to all those that support our departmental awards and help us recognize these students.

Despite financial challenges, both at the state and in the university, the English Department is going strong. During this past year, we not only served over 1,200 English majors and minors, but also produced nearly 30,000 student credit hours to students in all majors throughout WMU. In addition, our faculty published 11 books and edited collections, 25 peer-reviewed articles, and 30 book reviews or editorials, 27 creative publications, and more presentations, workshops, and public readings than I can count. We have also continued to expand our online and extension campus offerings and expanded our first-year writing program to include students from the Haworth College of Business. In addition, we underwent a complete revamping of our old Practical Writing major/minor and unveiled a new cutting-edge replacement: Rhetoric and Writing Studies. This newly revised major is poised to become an important program that bridges the humanities with professional communication. We also continued to contribute to the greater Kalamazoo community through our Frostic Creative Writing series, our participation in the WMU Humanities for Everybody program, and with our public scholarly speakers’ talks.

Great things are on the horizon as we welcome in one of our largest classes of incoming graduate students in nearly a decade and continue to refine and build our undergraduate curriculum to enhance our students’ undergraduate experiences.

Thanks for all your support.

Collegially,

Chair’s Corner

Rachel Swearingen’s short story, “Mitz’s Theory of Everything Series” (originally published in Agni) was chosen for the anthology New Stories from the Midwest 2012. It will appear in spring 2013.

Congratulations to Natalie Giarratano, (poetry Ph.D. candidate), one of her poems has been selected for publication in Hayden’s Ferry Review, Fall/Winter 2011-2012, Issue 49. “Asena, the Gray Wolf, to Tu Kueh after Many Years.”

Dustin Hoffman has some wonderful news to report. These are the publications that have happened in the last year:

“The Fire Chasers,” forthcoming in Blue Mesa Review.

“I’ve reported ‘Strong as Paper Men’ to Footnotes before, but it just got nominated for next year’s Pushcart Prize, which I haven’t reported. This story was used as the University of Colorado Denver Common Reading text for their incoming freshman, which is why they had me out to Denver to read to their students in the fall,” Hoffman says. “Then, one lonely poetry publication: ‘Amateur Paleontologist Stumbles into My Foot,’ forthcoming in Monkeybicycle.”

One of our WMU Ph.D. students in Medieval Studies, Keith Russo, just published his first essay, based on his experience as a classroom teacher at the IMG Pendleton School in Bradenton, FL. Two years ago, Keith co-edited (with Richard Utz and Christine Havens) an essay cluster on Culture and the Medieval King, in UNIversitas: The University of Northern Iowa Journal of Research, Scholarship, and Creative Activity.

Also, his story that won the Curbside Splendor Prize last year, “Doc the Fifth,” was nominated for a Pushcart. And he’s had a couple other pieces accepted for publication in the coming year at Hayden’s Ferry Review and Passages North.

2nd year MFA student Elissa Cahn’s has two stories accepted for publication: “Head of the Dragon” in NANO Fiction and “Hanging Man” in Midwestern Gothic.

PhD (2008) alum Peter Geye’s second novel is to be published this fall by Unbridled Books. The Light-house Road tells the story of a young Norwegian immigrant woman and her misbegotten son at the turn of the twentieth century. Set against the northern Minnesota wilderness and on the waters of Lake Superior, it explores the themes of love and family and what it means to make an honest living in a corrupt world. Geye’s first novel, Safe from the Sea, won the Indie Lit Award and the Northeastern Minnesota Book Award.

Dave Dempsey (BA ’77 and our 2011 Distinguished Alumnus) and his brother, Jack, have co-authored Ink Trails: Michigan’s Famous and Forgotten Authors. It comes out from MSU Press this fall.

More Student News

Dan Toronto’s story “Two-Track” was accepted for publication in The Louisville Review.

Laurie Cedlinik, (1st year fiction PhD) has had a productive year: “Since I’ve arrived here, I’ve had a story come out in Cimarron Review, ‘Do This in Memory of Me,’ and have another forthcoming in West Branch, ‘Wake Turbulence.’ I was also a finalist for the Black River Chapbook prize in Fiction.”

Rachel Kincaid, (1st year fiction MFA) was published in The Wide Net, and Glenn Shaheen was interviewed in the same issue (by Franklin Cline, if we’re going to be full disclosure in terms of department participation). She also had a rap blog that is technically fiction, “but I don’t know how seriously people who aren’t me will take that.”

Dan Mancilla (3rd year fiction PhD) has a story out in the current issue of the White Whale Review 4.1, called “Solista”.

Myltazaire K. Cobb, an elementary education major, has been awarded the University’s 2012 Excellence in Diversity Award. Professor Toby Kahn-Loftus nominated Cobb for work produced in their English 3690 class.

Faculty News

Dean Alex Enyedi has announced that Eve Salisbury has been awarded the College of Arts and Sciences Award in Research and Creative Activities.

Salisbury was honored, along with other awardees, at an open house event in March 2012 at the University Center for the Humanities.

Salisbury also presided over a session organized by the Division on Middle English Language and Literature, Excluding Chaucer at the 127th Annual MLA Convention in Seattle, held January 5-8, 2012, entitled Medieval Drama and Performative Theology.

A Companion to the Literature and Culture of the American West (Wiley-Blackwell 2011), edited by Nicolas S. Witschi, has been named by Choice as an Outstanding Academic Title for 2011. According to the official notice posted online, “Every year, Choice subject editors single out for recognition the most significant print and electronic works reviewed in Choice during the previous calendar year. Appearing annually in Choice’s January issue, this prestigious list of publications reflects the best in scholarly titles and attracts extraordinary attention from the academic library community. The 2011 feature includes 629 titles in 54 disciplines and subsections.”

Witschi has also been commissioned by the Bank of America’s Art in Our Communities program in order to increase community stability through the support of museums and nonprofit galleries. It lends communities the use of special exhibitions in its expansive corporate collection at no cost. The exhibition, titled “Searching the Horizon: The Real American West 1830-1920,” focuses on both the common mythologies and the realities of the American West.

Allen Webb just scored a book publishing “hat trick”—three books at once! All three books focus on contemporary topics in the teaching of English.

Teaching Literature in Virtual Worlds: Immersive Learning in English Studies, Teaching Literature of Today’s Middle East and a third book, Teaching to Exceed the English Language Arts Common Core Standards: A Literacy Practices Approach for 6-12 Classrooms. Webb is a co-author (along with Richard Beach and Amanda Thein) of the third book which sets forth meaningful and exciting ways for teachers across the country to address the new curriculum standards (adopted by 44 states).

Grace Tiffany’s article, “Shakespeare’s Parables,” a version of which was presented at the 2011 Renaissance Prose conference at Purdue, will be published in the upcoming issue of the journal Reformation.

Casey McKittrick presented “An Eye For a Stomach: Appetite-Epistemologies in Rear Window” upon invitation by the Critical Michigan Association of Screen Studies at University of Michigan, Ann Arbor in February.

He also presented a paper, “Hitchcock’s Appetites: Gender, Hunger and Identification,” at the International Society for the Study of Narrative conference in Las Vegas in March.

Chris Nagle’s essay on Letitia Elizabeth Landon (known as ‘L.E.L.’ to her contemporaries) is part of the recently released Encyclopedia of Romantic Literature published by Wiley-Blackwell under the general editorship of Frederick Burwick. The three-volume project is described as “an authoritative resource that covers British artistic, literary, and intellectual movements between 1780 and 1830, within the context of European, transatlantic and colonial historical and cultural interaction.”

Nagle recently returned from a conference on “Queer Temporalities” held at the Humanities Institute of Ireland, University College Dublin, where he was invited to discuss the recent work of Elizabeth Freeman, whose Time Binds conceptualizes chrononormativity, temporal drag, and erotohistoriography, offering one of the most important interventions in queer theory and cultural studies of the past decade.

A collaborative project at Western Michigan University, sponsored by the Medieval Institute, will negotiate the resonances of medieval culture in a modern North American city. The project leaders are Richard Utz (English) and Elizabeth C. Teviotdale (Medieval Institute).
