A Roman Enters In

Pete Cooper

Western Michigan University

Follow this and additional works at: http://scholarworks.wmich.edu/calliope

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation

Cooper, Pete (1956) "A Roman Enters In," Calliope: Vol. 3 : Iss. 2 , Article 19.
Available at: http://scholarworks.wmich.edu/calliope/vol3/iss2/19

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by the English at ScholarWorks at WMU. It has been accepted for inclusion in Calliope by an authorized editor of ScholarWorks at WMU. For more information, please contact maira.bundza@wmich.edu.
MY POET

My Poet is a hush old man who is not dead.
My Poet is a child who calls
his father Pain,
his mother Beauty,
who calls his Brothers to come home again.

Stone, bone, and mist below
My poet grows on,
and sings the sun around each cradle,
shouts out the hope from graves.

My Poet knows
as earth knows,
And spits his spite on irons
and on air.
And dies tomorrow, writhing song.

A ROMAN ENTERS IN

Beneath the rich, full robes
Flash-tied to tired old shoulders,
Hung his huge white hands.
Taunt, white, and positive hands
With only a drop of doubt in each broad palm
Nor was the firm face sure,
For all the bold power that weighed
On those great shoulders.
Yielding no awe to the guardian,
He asked, "Is there a Nazarene
Come before me called Jesus?"
And to the answer,
"It is as I thought."
And the face and the white hands
Received the knowledge finally,
And Pilate entered in.

Pete Cooper