kuru

Max Steele
Western Michigan University

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.wmich.edu/calliope

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://scholarworks.wmich.edu/calliope/vol4/iss3/25
Screams fell on Crete, and echoes rank in Labyrinth;
Daedalus flailed the air, and charged into Icarus' sky-wake;
But Icarus flew on, and laughed at melting wings.
They fell away, a rainbow west of Samos,
Forever lost in the surging Icarian Sea.

The script is old and I can read no farther
So I must block in words and bits of business,
For plays should end with a triumphant curtain.
I must think upon the Sun, the Icarus-loved Sky-God.
I know that in Him gods find their completion:
And soaring on forever, look down on Crete with pity.
Under folded cellophane wings I hesitate off-stage.
When the house-lights dim, I shall be Icarus of Crete.

Barbara Troy

kuru

yes father jackson
i believe in the trinity in the father
(picasso shubert and shakespeare)
in the son (pierrot the unfinished and king lear)
and in the holy ghost (eadimo)

and i believe in satan (magnificent in sin)
and i believe in you father jackson (in kuru the creeping horror)
(in kuru the laughing death)

Max Steele